Hope is a gift past, present, and future.

The Pain Unseen

My pain, it goes unseen,
My voice as yet unheard;
To share the truth has been,
Impossibility the word.

My heart, it has been stricken,
By a disease called despair;
Now the plot would thicken,
Society got me there.

Disabled, the title given,
When I walk and work just like you,
To tears I am often driven,
When society hasn't a clue.

You've shunned me as I rode,
Beside you on the bus;
At one time thanks were owed,
To a now lazy cuss.

Unlike the days of yesteryear,
When we were hidden away;
We walk beside you through the year,
Most without one word to say.

You ask me now why I'm silent,
Forgotten truth along the way;
Pain of ignorance wouldn't relent,
It forced me to be this way.

Our pain goes unseen,
Because fear has locked the door;
The sorrows lost between,
Were never known before.
